

The Green Library Project

As the need for a transition towards a sustainable society (economic, social, ecological, cultural) increases, new spaces of learning are necessary to get inspired, experience, come together, discuss and organise how we want this transition to happen.

This project wants to open up such a learning space.

Why a library?

Libraries are places with a long tradition of social and economic sustainability. They are free, share resources and are accessible to everyone. They are some of the last non-commercial spaces in our cities. A commonly shared resource so to say. We believe that libraries are the perfect place, to allow everybody to engage with the topic of sustainability. This project tries to prove this and take the first step in this dialogue.

An urban laboratory

Within the next months, we will try to fill up Garaget with prototypes, experiments and ideas around the topic of urban sustainability to showcase what this transition could look like. We will facilitate activities, create materials, set up info points, discussions and connect with people and organisations in Sofielund and Malmö to create a sustainable, inclusive city for all.
